Letter to Farmers from Biosolids Free Nova Scotia

Source: Submitted

Date: 09-Jul-2010

My name is Marilyn Cameron and I am Chair of the Biosolids & Waste Water Caucus with the Nova Scotia Environmental Network. Our Caucus firmly believes in the importance of supporting local farmers and our members shop in our communities and buy local at every opportunity. We agree that everyone benefits if agriculture succeeds and flourishes in Nova Scotia. Farming contributes significantly to our economy. However, we want to be assured that the foods produced in our province are, not only the freshest, but also the safest of foods produced anywhere.

We understand that treated sewage sludge (biosolids) is being utilized by some farmers on their crops or forage fields in Nova Scotia.

We have concluded that, unless sewage waste is completely free of industrial, commercial, and hospital contaminants or pathogens, using the product as a soil additive or fertilizer on agricultural soils is too risky an endeavor to ensure public health and safety - even if "treated". Treatment processes are not able to remove or stabilize most pollutants in sludge and these chemical substances can linger in the environment for decades - potentially contaminating our food and water sources. It is of concern to various livestock specialists that certain contaminants in sewage sludge could be accumulating in the fats in meat or milk products of livestock animals or impacting their health. In addition, some toxins can be taken up by plants and others can leach into groundwater sources or can remain and accumulate in the soils for many years - according to numerous environmental scientists.

The Biosolids Caucus is quite concerned that farmers are not being provided adequate information about biosolids and the negative impacts that its use could have on your soils, groundwater and surface water sources, livestock health, and property values. Farmers will be the ones left paying the price for any damaged land, contaminated water, or human, wildlife and livestock illnesses, etc. Farmers may also suffer losses resulting from lack of consumer confidence in local foods. The government of Nova Scotia has relinquished all liability that results from the use of the product and has clearly indicated that the end users (farmers) will be held responsible for any negative outcomes.

We are hoping that your farm does not utilize biosolids to fertilize your crops/animal feeds. It would be a shame to diminish the gains made in the "buy local" movement recently. More and more consumers seem to want local foods which are safe, healthy and are environmentally sustainable. If your farm does not use biosolids, we would really appreciate hearing back from you so that we can add your farm's name to the list posted on the Nova Scotia Environmental Network's website. Please include a list of all the products that you sell. Thank you for your attention to this important matter. See <http://nsen.ca/biosolids.php> for more information.

Kindest Regards,

Dr. Marilyn Cameron, DVM Chair, Biosolids & Waste Water
Caucus
